

come to the State of Nebraska, right here, and you have all these people talking about saving a package that the Appropriations Committee put together. You have got all these little state schools out there, these colleges. People come in here and say, give me a roof for a college. I think even Senator Lundy has probably come in here and asked for something for one of those little schools out there. We put roofs on colleges because somebody from out there will say, do this for my white school. They don't put white in front of it but they don't have to because every program that is not designated by the term "white" means white. Everyone of these agencies that is not being cut, Senator Pappas, is a white agency. So Senator Warner is right, you don't have to say you are targeting certain groups in terms because we know what the reality is. When you establish a structure and a means of doing things, there are certain words that don't have to be spoken anymore because everybody understands what is entailed. Talk about abolishing certain agriculture programs and people would scream to high heaven, but I say again, I watched you all hat up and run to Washington, 27, to help the white farmers and you had white people slam the door in your face. The editors say yesterday was the blackest day in the Legislature and white people did it to them. They should have said it is the whitest day. White people did the voting. White people did it to Commonwealth but that kind of discussion makes you uncomfortable. You don't even like to hear words. I am doing this and I am taking this approach for a purpose. The words that I have said this morning have been upsetting to some of you and you think they ought not to have been spoken and you have got a burr under your blanket, so I am merely speaking words and cannot hurt any of you and you are upset. You want to pretend not to understand the plight of people who have actual discriminatory hurtful actions placed against them. You can't understand that but you will mutter around here when you are slopping up the lobbyists' liquor and food about what a bad fellow I am. These lobbyists have contempt for you, too. They talk to me about various ones of you. They tell me your business. All they have got to do is pop their finger and here you come running. They know that you are on the chain. I know you are on the chain and I can say it because you are too weak to cut that umbilical cord. You need to sponge and leech off these lobbyists. You belong to them. They own you and you have come back here after lunch smelling like liquor and that is why you don't have prayer
